Team Charter — HSBI @ ABCC 2027

To be discussed, amended, and signed by all five of us at kick-off (W1). It exists so that in week 19, when everyone is tired, the rules are already agreed.

What we are here for

We travel to Winnipeg to compete seriously — Babeș-Bolyai proved in 2026 that a first-time international team can win the ABCC outright — and to come back better presenters, faster analysts, and a tighter team than any seminar could make us. Both goals rank above individual credit.

Commitments

Each of us commits to the training cadence in `02-plan/week_by_week_plan.md` (one weekend block + one midweek session + 30 minutes of drills, rising toward February), to preparing for sessions rather than attending them, and to flagging conflicts (exams, work, life) two weeks ahead so sessions move rather than die. The coach commits to organized sessions, honest feedback, external judges for the graded simulations, and handling all organizer communication.

How we work

Roles are leads, not silos (`03-team/role_playbooks.md`); everyone can cover every part, and the opener rotates through all four of us in training. Feedback follows the scoresheet (`01-competition/judging_scoresheet.md`): two strengths, two gaps, one drill — about the work, never the person, and everyone takes their turn receiving it. Disagreements on case content are settled by argument and evidence with a hard time-box; if the box expires, the strategist decides the storyline, the finance lead decides the numbers, and we commit to the chosen line as one team — in front of judges, nobody relitigates.

Non-negotiables

Simulation conditions are real conditions: real clocks, real device rules, no coach contact after release, .pptx to the deadline — every time, so Winnipeg feels like a Tuesday. The anonymity rule is absolute from the first mock: no HSBI names, logos, or hints in any deck, document, or anecdote used in front of judges. Deadlines bind: the person who owns a deliverable owns telling the team early if it is at risk. And the trip is also a trip: we attend the social program fully, represent our school well (without naming it to judges), and nobody's competition result changes how we treat each other at breakfast.

If it stops working

Anyone can call a charter talk at any time — fifteen minutes, coach moderates, problem named plainly, adjustment agreed. Persistent no-shows or unpreparedness first cost the person the most attractive speaking slot, then — coach's call after a direct conversation — the competition seat, because four prepared teammates outrank five names on a roster.
